Anthony Magee is a commercial litigator and intellectual property litigator and counselor. For many years, Tony has represented businesses and individuals in protecting, enforcing, and defending their commercial interests and intellectual property assets—initially, as a Chancery Barrister practicing in the U.K., and then as an attorney in Dallas, Texas. Before forming Magee  Legal, PLLC, Tony practiced for 15 years at the powerhouse trial boutique McKool Smith before being tapped to lead the intellectual property section of Gruber Hurst Johansen Hail Shank. Tony's legal practice encompasses all types of complex commercial and intellectual property disputes, including business disputes in state and federal courts and patent and trademark disputes in both federal courts and in the Patent Trial & Appeal and Trademark Trial & Appeals Boards of the United States Patent and Trademark Office.

Tony has handled technically complex claims for major telecom companies, high-technology companies, and businesses that strategically deploy innovative technology in their products. Tony's extensive experience includes litigating disputes involving many varied technologies, including:

- Telecommunications, including for inmate telephone systems
- Data analysis and crime detection
- Medical devices and management systems
- Prepaid debit cards
- Satellite radio
- Automated content presentation
- Cable modems
- Semiconductors
- Video game graphics
- Computer system security
- Automated document processing
